Thank you Dr. Q for this very engaging conversation platform. I felt motivated to go to work and face any challenge. Along with other school leaders, we tackled some hard scenarios by putting our thoughts together to best resolve the situations. I feel confident knowing that I have a team to call on when faced with a conversation that requires not only a resolution but an act of change. Thank you to all the school leaders and Dr. Q for true leadership.

I really enjoyed tonight's class. Being in a circle of courageous women was very empowering and I was so grateful to experience that today as I embarked on my first official year in a leadership role as a preschool director. What I enjoyed most were the scenario questions. It gave me an opportunity to see from multiple lenses and helped me to process each situation. As I continue to find my balance in the field, I feel at peace knowing I can bounce ideas off of other educators that have values and ethical practices; people that can assist me as I have courageous conversations. Truly, no leader wants to be an enemy but in the leadership role, I believe that depending on others' perceptions of you, it's easy to become the villain. Ultimately, I am not a victim, and "I will row with my staff" but if they cannot row, they cannot go.

Thank you, Dr. Q
